

Can't find your old immunization records?

It's important to keep immunization records for you and your child. You may need these records for child care, school, camp, college, the military, travel, or employment.

If you don't have these records, you can...

- ✓ Check your home, ask your parents, look in baby books, old baby files or filing cabinets.
- ✓ Contact the last or most recent place you were vaccinated: family doctor, local health department immunization clinic, student health services, travel clinic, military, or other healthcare provider.
- ✓ Contact the last or most recent place that required an immunization record: child care center, school, college, or workplace.
- ✓ Contact State or Local Health Department Immunization Registries (in counties and states where you have been vaccinated before).

Protect Yourself, Your Family and Your Community

The only way to protect yourself from certain diseases is to get immunized. Immunizations don't stop after childhood, it's important to stay up-to-date at every age.

Certain diseases like whooping cough, measles and chicken pox, can spread rapidly. Immunizations protect loved ones and your community from disease, including the vulnerable members such as infants and others who may not be able to be immunized. It only takes a small number of unprotected people to cause a disease outbreak.

Some vaccines need more than one dose to be effective. If a person hasn't received all of the scheduled doses they need, they can still get seriously ill.

Included is a list of some of the available immunizations at Jefferson County Public Health. For the most current immunization schedule, please visit the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) website - www.cdc.gov/vaccines.
